THE ACADEMY

The Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia was established in 1971. Before this date, Academy functions were fulfilled through the Social Science Research Council of Australia, founded in 1942. The membership of the Academy comprises those who have achieved a very high level of scholarly distinction, recognised internationally. The Academy is an autonomous, non-governmental organisation, devoted to the advancement of knowledge and research in the various social sciences.

The Academy is a corporate body of social scientists. Its objects are:

• to promote excellence in and encourage the advancement of the social sciences in Australia;
• to act as a co-ordinating group for the promotion of research and teaching in the social sciences;
• to foster excellence in research and to subsidise the publication of studies in the social sciences;
• to encourage and assist in the formation of other national associations or institutions for the promotion of the social sciences or any branch of them;
• to promote international scholarly cooperation and to act as an Australian national member of international organisations concerned with the social sciences;
• to act as consultant and adviser in regard to the social sciences; and
• to comment where appropriate on national needs and priorities in the area of the social sciences.

PRESIDENT’S REPORT

The Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia is a learned society that seeks to advance the social sciences. Through a range of activities it promotes research and teaching, provides expert advice, fosters greater appreciation of the social sciences and represents them in national and international settings.

The Academy is also an autonomous, non-governmental organisation. While most of the Fellows hold academic posts, the membership extends beyond the universities. The Fellows are elected to the Academy on the basis of their scholarly distinction in one or more of the social sciences, and comprise an unusual breadth of expertise. The advice and the assistance that the Academy provides to government and to the public is valued because of its independence.

From its formation the Academy has worked with a modest budget and the annual grant-in-aid from the Australian Government has been its principal source of income. The chief asset has always been the expertise of the Fellows. Their willingness to contribute time and energy for no recompense has allowed the Academy to serve its objectives; but in order for this resource to be mobilised effectively the Academy depends on an appropriate infrastructure of professional staff and operational support.

At last year’s Annual General Meeting the Academy was forced to make economies in its expenditure because of the conclusion of additional government funding under the Higher Education Innovation Program. A Review of the Learned Academies had reported in early 2006 and recommended that their grants-in-aid be doubled, but the federal budget announced in that year made no such provision. In May of this year we were informed by the Honourable Julie Bishop, the Minister for Education, Science and Training that the recommendation of the Review has been accepted and our grant-in-aid will be doubled.

We have already expressed our appreciation to the Minister for this vote of confidence in the Academy, and we also owe thanks to a number of friends of this and the other three Learned Academies who helped to establish a better appreciation of their work. My predecessors Leon Mann and Sue Richardson were particularly tenacious in pursuing the funding recommendations, and John Beaton as Executive Director provided invaluable intelligence to support their advocacy.

This increased funding will be available from the beginning of 2008, and thus provides the Academy with an opportunity to plan how best to augment its activity.
There is potential to expand a number of the successful current programs, and also to enhance the work of the Academy with new initiatives.

Contributions of Academy expertise to public policy

A major objective of the Academy is to contribute its expertise to public policy. The ways in which the Academy opens debate about national issues, so that it may contribute the expertise of its Fellows to both the general public and to policy formulation and effectiveness, is built into its various programs through:

- Roundtables and other activities of the Policy and Advocacy Program;
- innovative and cutting edge research discussed in the Workshop Program;
- exchange with researchers in other countries offered in the International Program;
- encouragement and support of research projects in the Research Program;
- the Annual Cunningham Lecture and the Annual Symposium; and
- publication of scholarly debate through its journal Dialogue, and Occasional Papers on a variety of topics.

Each of these is considered in detail elsewhere in the Annual Report, but a few words about the Policy Roundtables are pertinent here. Roundtables have brought together Fellows and other scholars with senior public servants and policy makers from the Federal and State governments for intensive half-day discussions of particular issues. These Roundtables were identified within the Policy and Advocacy Program as the best contribution that could be made through that Program, within the limits of a curtailed budget in 2006-2007.

From the Academy’s inception, government support has been premised on the expectation that the social sciences could inform and assist national objectives. Despite this shared aspiration, both social scientists and government frequently found the results to be disappointing. The ARC Linkage Project that I have been conducting with Professor Robert Pascoe on ‘The Social Sciences and the Making of Postwar Australia’ reveals a persistent misunderstanding of expectations in the relationship. As government expanded its support for universities and their research activity, it expected findings that could serve its economic and social objectives and found much of what was done impractical, esoteric or unpalatably critical. For their part, social scientists felt decision makers disregarded their expertise in favour of expedient alternatives. Neither party learned from this confusion of purposes. Government became increasingly prescriptive in its research policy, failing to see that narrow instrumentalism would yield barren results. Academic researchers bent the new rules to their own purposes, confirming the suspicions of those who funded them.

The Policy Roundtables provide an alternative forum for establishing a more productive relationship between public servants and social scientists. By identifying a particular topic and exploring it intensively, they allow both parties to gain a clearer understanding of their respective needs and interests.
During 2007 there were two Roundtables: the first, on Community, was held in collaboration with the Department of Families, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs (FaCSIA); the second, held in conjunction with the Institute of Public Administration Australia (IPAA), and with the support of Minter Ellison Lawyers, examined Federalism. A third Roundtable will be held immediately following the Annual Symposium, ‘Power, People, Water: Urban Water Services and Human Behaviour in Australia’, and the roundtable, supported by the National Water Commission, will foster discussion on the policy implications and possibilities related to this theme. My thanks go to Michael Keating, who has managed this Program for the Academy since its inception, and to Glenn Withers, to whom the baton has now passed. Will Douglas provides administrative support. Summaries of each Roundtable are published in Dialogue and posted at the Academy’s website.

Publications

Three issues of the Academy journal Dialogue have been published. Besides publishing reports of Academy activities, each issue provides a forum for discussion of a topical issue: in 2006-07 these were ‘We Live in Interesting Times’; ‘The Arts in Society’; and ‘(Some of) Our National Institutions’. Also published were the Cunningham Lecture: Building Democracy and Justice after Conflict by Hilary Charlesworth; and in the Occasional Paper Series: 3/2006 Income Contingent Loans as Public Policy by Bruce Chapman; 1/2007 Learning to Read in Australia by Max Coltheart and Margot Prior; and (currently being peer reviewed) ‘Population and Australia’s Future Labour Force’ by Peter McDonald and Glenn Withers.

Indigenous Summer School

The Academy also recognises its responsibilities in outreach activities. Since 2003 ASSA has conducted a summer school for Indigenous postgraduate students from all round the country. The summer school was initiated by a former President, Leon Mann, and a Fellow, Marcia Langton, and operates in partnership with the University of Melbourne, primarily through the Centre for Health and Society (and the active support of its Director, Professor Ian Anderson). Jennifer Fernance of the Academy Secretariat provides administrative support.

In 2007 another successful summer school included seventeen Indigenous postgraduate students, representing all states except Tasmania. Seven faculty members participated fulltime and eight part-time, assisting the students in developing skills and techniques appropriate to their postgraduate studies. ASSA is tracking the program’s effectiveness and will continue to do so until at least 2009.

Election of Fellows

In 2007 twenty-four new Fellows were elected to the membership of the Academy. The eleven women and thirteen men will be introduced and welcomed at the Annual Academy dinner in November.

The Early Career Award for 2007 has been won by Dr Jason Sharman, Queen Elizabeth II Fellow and Associate Professor in the Centre for Governance and Public Policy of the Griffith Asia Institute, Griffith University. I congratulate all new Fellows and the Early Career Award recipient on their success.

National Academies Forum

In addition to the increase in the grants-in-aid to the four Learned Academies, the government also increased the grant to the National Academies Forum (NAF). NAF is the umbrella organisation of the Learned Academies, and its presidency and secretariat rotates among them. The Academy of the Social Sciences took responsibility for NAF at the beginning of the year. Irina Kotycheva joined the ASSA Secretariat to assist with administration.

The chief activity of NAF has been in response to the new Research Quality Framework (RQF). The Academy has been engaged in workshops and forums on the principles and design of the RQF, and was asked by the Department of Education, Science and Training (DEST) to assist in one of the instruments that is to be used to evaluate research, a ranking of journals.

NAF is also in the final stages of editing the proceedings of the conference ‘A celebration of the history, culture, science and technology of Recherche Bay’ held in February. This is expected to be published before the end of 2007.

Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils

The Academy has also assumed the secretariat of the Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils, and the Executive Director reports on its activity elsewhere in the Report.

Council for the Humanities, Arts and Social Sciences

The Academy remains a major affiliate and supporter of the Council for the Humanities, Arts and Social Sciences (CHASS), and has been involved in a number of its activities during the year.

CHASS was established as a much-needed advocacy group on behalf of the humanities and the creative and performing arts as well as the social sciences. For good reason the board of CHASS is constituted to serve the needs of the sector rather than to represent particular components, but the election of Sue Richardson to the board has assisted a closer involvement of the Academy in its activities. The expanded responsibilities of the Academy have made it necessary for CHASS to find new accommodation, so that we no longer share our premises with its secretariat, but we look forward to continuing close involvement in its activities.

Donations

I wish to acknowledge those Fellows who have made donations to the Academy during the financial year: Don Spearritt; Sir Anthony Mason; Victor J Callan; JD Bruce Miller; Michael Clyne; John Poynter; Cindy Gallois; John Legge; Peter Groenewegen; Chin-Liew Ten; Jamie Mackie; Mary Luszcz; Stephen Castles; and Keith Hancock. Thank you.
Acknowledgements

I noted above that the efficacy of the Academy derives from the expertise of the Secretariat and the willingness of Fellows to participate in its activities. We are fortunate that the staff who constitute Secretariat are so highly skilled and so committed to the fortunes of the Social Sciences. In my first year as President I have relied particularly on their advice and assistance, and I thank John Beaton as Executive Director along with all his colleagues.

The same holds for the Fellows who constitute the Executive and chair the various committees, as well as those who serve on them and others who contribute to the life of Academy. They have contributed to a successful year and helped me measurably.

GENERAL REPORT

2007 will prove to be a watershed year for ASSA, the year in which we began to taste the sweet water of our improved grant-in-aid. While the increased funding will not be available until January 2008 its appearance on the horizon has lifted spirits and gladdened hearts in the Executive, the Secretariat and beyond. Those spirits are lifted at the thought of improving our programs, increasing our engagement with Fellows, and enhancing our influence for the betterment of society. Plans are underway to increase the breadth and depth of our activities and these will be affirmed at the March 2008 Executive Committee meeting and will benefit from recommendations of the Fellows at the 2007 Annual General Meeting in November. We are indebted to the Department of Education, Science and Training (DEST) and Minister Julie Bishop for this support, but it is important to remember that the seeds of this happy development were sown during the past five years through our improved dialogue with DEST. I thank all of you who provided advice, support or commiserations through this process. In the end it has been a significant step, and I think the first true increase in the grant-in-aid since the inception of ASSA.

At the request of DEST, as I write this report we are working at fever pitch on the Research Quality Framework’s exercise in Journal Rankings. Each of you and your professional organisations are being polled on the quality of the various organs devoted to research output. This is a complicated and sometimes vexatious process that we hope will assist DEST in understanding how research funding is providing for academic research and how Australia is engaging with the best of the rest of the world. Each of the four learned Academies is busy with this activity on the part of its disciplines, and ASSA plays a special role as we now hold the Presidency (Stuart Macintyre) and the secretariat of the National Academies Forum (NAF). Thus we will be co-ordinating the ranking results for all the academic disciplines represented by the four Academies and will present them to DEST by the end of October. Compared with the UK’s exercise we are doing ours in record time and at minimal cost. We hope it will prove useful.

Although the smaller budget for 2006-07 has somewhat limited our Programs, they have continued to function close to capacity. As reported by the President, the Policy and Advocacy Program has confined itself to three Policy Roundtables, but the Workshop Program supported nine workshops, of which five have already been held. A further four are scheduled in November and December. In the Research Program, progress can be recorded in all the ARC Learned Academies Special Projects of the past three years, from publication of a book (2004) to a first major paper (2006); and a contract between the Academy and the Australian Bureau of Statistics was signed in May, for ASSA to commission seven general interest essays based on material derived from the 2006 Census. Authors met with representatives of ABS in September. The International Program supports active relationships and exchanges with the People’s Republic of China, The Netherlands, UK, France and India. Several dozen scholars are assisted by these programs each year to travel for research or receive visits from those who share their interests, promoting fruitful relationships and exchanges.

The Academy is a member of the UNESCO Social Sciences Network and Fellow Margot Prior ably represents the social sciences as Network Chair.

ASSA has also become the secretariat for the Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils (AASSREC), and will remain so indefinitely; the presidency of the organisation changes every two years. From 27-30 September the current President of AASSREC, Professor Michiatsu Kaino, and the Science Council of Japan will host the 17th Biennial AASSREC Conference in Nagoya, Japan. The conference theme is ‘Economic Development and Environmental Issues: Perspectives for Social Sciences’. Social scientists from the seventeen member nations will present papers, and several other Asian nations will send observers for the first time.

In 2006 the ASSA Annual Symposium focused on internal migration, an important aspect of which is the seemingly relentless movement of people to cities. In a complementary way the 2007 Symposium will address the problems we all face with some discomfort and anxiety, the supply and quality of urban water services in Australian cities. The Symposium will be followed by an ASSA Policy and Advocacy Roundtable bringing together Symposium participants and policy makers in order to discuss how social science research can assist governments in devising wise and equitable policy for urban water delivery.

All of the activities touched upon briefly here (and/or in the President’s Report) are reported in more detail later in this volume, with updates made regularly on the Academy website at www.assa.edu.au.

In other news I am happy to report that we have negotiated an agreement with the Australian National University that will see us remaining at 28 Balmain Crescent for the foreseeable future. In the last couple of years we have been hosting the Council for Humanities, Arts and the Social Sciences (CHASS) in our building. That growing organisation, and our own expansion has caused CHASS to relocate to a new home at the University of Canberra, ending our agreeable if close-quartered co-habitation.

The ASSA Secretariat has undergone some personnel changes during the year. Will Douglas has joined us to manage both the Policy and Advocacy and the Workshop Programs, in a part time capacity. Irina Kotycheva is managing our NAF responsibilities. Irina, an engineer trained in Russia, brings a new cultural dimension to us as well as some tools for understanding other-Academy colleagues in the science and technology community. In a temporary capacity, Sunny Hutson is working on the RQF exercise and Freya Job, a highly qualified publication production expert is joining us to produce the NAF volume on the Recherche Bay Conference held in Hobart in February 2007. We welcome these bright new faces and the energy and skills they bring to us. John Robertson continues to manage the Research and International Programs and oversees the Annual Symposium. Jennifer Fernance controls the increasingly complex flow of ASSA’s funds, accounts, insurance and contracts. Peg Job manages our publication output and inspires contributors to Dialogue. Robin Taylor runs the office and the important election process that remains at the heart of every year’s activities. Our part-time employees and our temporary employees combine to be an effective Secretariat. It is my pleasure to support them as best I can.

I also extend my thanks to the Fellowship, those who serve tirelessly and without recompense on our Committees, and those who provide timely advice, assistance and creativity when it is required. And finally, last year in this column I wrote ‘I expect to be able to report in this space next year that government has recognised and rewarded this with a substantial increase in the grant-in-aid to ASSA.’ Et voilà!

Executive Director

ANNUAL SYMPOSIUM 2006

Australians on the Move: Internal Migration in Australia

In the public and academic discourse on Australia’s current and likely future population the focus is primarily on numbers and the processes shaping them, and on their characteristics, especially age and ethnic background. Little attention is paid to the third element in demography’s troika – population distribution. Yet Australia’s population is one of the most concentrated of any country and understanding its dynamics is crucial to the efficient and equitable planning and provision of all types of goods and services. Moreover, with 17 per cent of the population changing their permanent place of residence each year and 42.3 per cent every five years Australia has one of the most residentially mobile of any national population. It is largely internal migration (along with where international migrants settle) which is the cause of differences between areas in their rates of population growth (or decline) because spatial differentials in fertility and mortality are quite small. Hence the understanding of contemporary and evolving patterns of internal migration is of considerable significance. This is facilitated in Australia by the asking of a question in the population census on place of residence five years ago. Such a question has been asked each census since 1971 and another question on place of residence one year ago has been asked in most. Yet these data remain under-analysed in Australia. Accordingly the Academy of Social Sciences in Australia with the Australian Research Council funded a project to assess internal migration patterns, trends, processes and impacts, focusing particularly around the results of the 2001 Census of Population and Housing Internal Migration data. On 21 November 2006 the Academy hosted a one-day Symposium at the Shine Dome in Canberra to present the initial findings of the study and critically discusses them.
The Symposium began with a presentation by Martin Bell which introduced the scope of the project as well as providing an overview of the historical trends in internal migration in Australia. He also examined emerging trends in temporary migration. Despite the lack of comprehensive data it is evident that such movement has increased substantially and diversified in its types and impacts. The spatial patterning is quite different to internal migration and its impacts in creating significant diurnal, weekly or seasonal variations in the populations of particular areas is considerable. The next presentation by Dominic Brown was a detailed analysis of trends and patterns in internal migration as indicated by the results of the 2001 Population Census. This shows that there has been a steady increase in the proportion of Australians moving between censuses with 42 per cent moving between 1996 and 2001; most of the increase has been in intrastate moves. While the basic age differentials in movement have been maintained there have been some interesting shifts with a slight increase occurring in the age of peak mobility. The net redistribution of population toward Queensland, evident for several decades, has been maintained. Graeme Hugo then examined the nexus between international and internal migration in Australia. International migration is an important influence on population distribution through the influence of immigrants choosing to settle in particular areas, notably the largest cities. However, their subsequent mobility after arrival in Australia differs from that of the Australia-born population, although with increasing time the patterns converge.

The next series of presentations focused on the impacts of internal migration on different parts of Australia. Ian Burnley looked at the changing patterns of internal migration within Australia’s capital cities as well as between those cities and other parts of Australia. He examined especially the patterns of suburbanisation in cities, but also the significance of inner city revitalisation and urban consolidation and the role of internal migration in them. One of the most striking shifts in internal migration in Australia in the last two decades has been the migration to coastal areas of east, southeastern and southwestern Australia, a process which has been referred to as ‘sea change’. The scale of this phenomenon and the nature of the migration and migrants involved were examined by Jeromey Temple. A third paper in this section, presented by Jim Walmsley, examined internal migration trends and their implications, focusing particularly on the wheat-sheep belt and the rangeland-pastoral areas. He showed that while the popular images of depopulation apply across much of the area, there are also areas of immigration driven by resource development, tourism, lifestyle preferences and the ‘tree change’ phenomenon.

The third series of papers addressed the implications of internal migration trends for a number of important aspects of Australian society. The first, presented by Tom Wilson and Phil Rees, examined the interrelationships between internal migration and the labour market in Australia. Patterns of labour force migration, the extent to which migration is a mechanism for regional labour market adjustment, links between spatial and social mobility and the extent of government influence on internal labour mobility were all discussed. Maryann Wulff examined interrelationships between the changing housing market and internal migration in Australia. She focused on a case study of Victoria to show how changes in the supply of, and demand for housing are influencing migration. The extent to which social changes are influencing and reflected by migration patterns were then addressed by Ann Larson. She focused especially on the complex relationship between socioeconomic advantage/disadvantage and population mobility. Finally in this section Graeme Hugo addressed the increasingly prominent issue of internal migration and the environment. He examined the extent to which the environment can be both a cause and a consequence of internal migration, considering some of the possible effects of climate change on internal migration and population distribution in Australia.

The final series of presentations looked at the internal migration patterns and implications for particular groups within Australian society. John Taylor discussed the distinctive pattern of mobility of the Indigenous population, and showed that the intensity of Indigenous migration almost doubled between 1991 and 2001. Despite some difficulties with the data, he was able to demonstrate significant differences between Indigenous and non-Indigenous mobility in capital cities and different settlement type areas in the non-metropolitan area. Dianne Rudd examined the levels and patterns of internal migration of the most mobile group – youth. She showed some distinctive gender differentials, and that youth migration patterns are often quite different from those of the remainder of the population. This, for example, is the case in Sydney where net immigration of youth contrasts sharply with net internal migration losses of other age groups. The final paper, presented by Don Rowland, focused on migration and ageing. While it examined differences between generations with respect to internal migration it especially focused on the mobility of the older population. He showed the significant variation between the mobility patterns of Australia’s ‘young-old and old-old’ populations.

The Symposium was both interesting and instructive and those attending left with a better appreciation of the population processes that affect us all.

Graeme Hugo

CUNNINGHAM LECTURE 2006

The Cunningham Lecture 2006 ‘Building Democracy and Justice after Conflict’ was delivered by Hilary Charlesworth* AM, FASSA, Federation Fellow in the Regulatory Institutions Network at the Research School of Social Sciences, and Professor of International Law and Human Rights in the Faculty of Law at the Australian National University.

Taking three cases in which Australia has had a direct stake – Timor Leste, Iraq and Solomon Islands – Professor Charlesworth examines the evidence from the perspective of an international lawyer in order to tease out whether it is possible to develop any general principles to guide democracy and justice building enterprises after situations of conflict.

After detailing the differences between the three countries considered, and the particular circumstances of each, Professor Charlesworth makes four general observations about ‘democracy-building’ projects:

- There is typically a soaring unemployment rate of local populations in the democracy-building era, which relate directly to an increase in criminality.
- Democracy-building tends to advantage existing elites, and can reinforce, for example, the marginalisation of women in public life.
- Democracy-building is often viewed as a project of nurturing internationally-oriented groups who can administer locally but who also are sympathetic to integrating the country into the global economic system.
- The linkage of democracy-building to the war against terror has limited the horizons of democracy-builders: much greater emphasis is given to increasing military and police forces than to ensuring public participation in government.

She concludes that we need a much broader debate on what ‘democracy’ means, and that if justice within democracy-building is to be sought, the following general propositions need to be observed:

- Democracy and legitimacy are closely entwined. Our political leaders argue that focus on the legality of an intervention is irrelevant, once it has occurred, but the evidence suggests that the chances of establishing democracy are closely linked to the legitimacy of the intervention as perceived by the object of the intervention.

- Stability must not be confused with democracy. We should develop a substantive definition of democracy that is less tied to institutions than to values such as the creation of conditions of equality between citizens. The focus must be the encouragement of indigenous governance structures and the challenge is to build these inclusively and within a human rights framework.

- Local voices must be engaged. We rarely consider democracy and justice building projects from the perspective of those most affected by them; the people being saved have no ‘subjectivity or autonomy’. It is striking that almost all international attempts to build democracy and justice have been in non-Western countries. The major players in the democracy-building business are almost invariably from developed countries and they do their work literally and figuratively in a language foreign to those they aspire to assist. This quickly leads to a sense that democracy-building is a substitute for empire. The engagement of local populations in the democracy-building process requires a basis of knowledge about indigenous political concepts and power structures on the part of those claiming to build democracy.

- The democracy-builders must be made accountable. There is no international system that makes democracy-builders accountable for their activities; indeed it has been pointed out that modern democracy-builders are less accountable than those working under the old Mandate or Trusteeship systems. A significant part of the costs of democracy-building missions go to the salaries of expatriates. These missions have created a new elite cadre of state-building experts who move on to new conflict situations, while the employment rate in the recently democratised countries remains at extremely low levels.

In the end, the project of democracy-building tells us more about the democracy-builders than the country to which democracy is being brought; it allows us to construct the ‘other’ as chaotic and ourselves as ordered, benevolent and magnanimous. We can thus deflect scrutiny of the failures of democracy and justice in our own societies.

The Cunningham Lecture has been published by the Academy in its Occasional Paper Series as 2/2007.

The recipient of the Academy Early Career Award for 2007, Jason Sharman, is Queen Elizabeth II Fellow and Associate Professor in the Centre for Governance and Public Policy of the Griffith Asia Institute, Griffith University. He was awarded his PhD in 1999 from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Since then he has developed an international reputation as an innovative and prolific researcher writing on European politics, and more recently on money laundering, corruption and offshore finance.

Associate Professor Sharman’s most recent book, Havens in a Storm, looks at the international struggle for the $15 trillion stock of capital invested in tax havens. It is based on fieldwork in 22 countries, and has been published with Cornell University Press, one of the world’s leading publishers in the field of international political economics. His other theoretical and empirical writings have been published in the leading comparative politics and international relations journals in the United States and Europe.

Associate Professor Sharman has advised international organisations including the World Bank, the Commonwealth and APEC on anti-money laundering policy, as well as the Australian Tax Office, Treasury and Attorney-General’s on offshore finance and crime. His policy work has been reviewed in the Economist, Financial Times and specialist business journals, and he has led seminars at private finance industry conferences in Europe, Africa and the Caribbean.

His record was recognised by the ARC with the award of a Queen Elizabeth II Fellowship in 2006 as part of Associate Professor Sharman’s second ARC Discovery grant. Since 2003 Sharman has raised over $1 million in research funds, the majority as sole lead researcher. He is an exciting scholar with a great future and a worthy recipient of the ASSA Early Career Award.
POLICY AND ADVOCACY PROGRAM

Subsequent to its inception in late 2005, the major activity of the Academy’s Policy and Advocacy Committee has become the Policy Roundtable Series. This series was established as an arena where social scientists could inform policy makers and advisors of the relevance of the latest research by scholars, with the feedback obtained serving to increase the policy relevance of future research. The Policy Roundtables bring together Fellows of the Academy and other scholars with senior public officials from both Federal and State Government Departments for a half day to exchange views and experiences on a particular issue on which the social sciences can offer expertise. While the format of the roundtable is flexible, to allow for the needs of particular participants and themes, in general the roundtables incorporate three or four topics, each introduced briefly by one policy maker and one scholar. These opening remarks are then followed by general discussion. The format allows the majority of available time to be devoted to discussion, with the aim of promoting a genuine dialogue.

In addition to being a unique interface for research and policy dialogue, the roundtables are designed to establish the networks required to elaborate on ideas discussed. The Policy and Advocacy Committee aims to expand the Policy Roundtable Series, and by this means, continue to create networks across academia and government. These will be a valuable resource for both communities and will raise the profile of the Academy as a source of pertinent and timely research knowledge for public policy makers.

Community

In November 2006, in collaboration with the Department of Families, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs (FaCSIA), the Policy and Advocacy Committee held the third roundtable for that year, focusing on the theme of Community. The roundtable was convened by Geoffrey Lawrence from the University of Queensland, and Robyn Oswald from FaCSIA. The notion of ‘community’ continues to generate much debate among scholars and policy makers, and the general aim of this roundtable was to examine questions about the nature, role and effectiveness of community as a social policy device. More specifically, proceedings provided a framework for policy makers to consider new opportunities for financial interventions by government, in the light of a theoretical understanding of community in contemporary Australia.

The roundtable comprised four sessions, which addressed:

- issues relating to identifying and working with communities while accounting for broader national and international issues and trends;
- problems associated with identifying strengths at the level of community and implementing suitable programs to build on these strengths;
• problems arising from indeterminate and inaccurate use of notions of ‘community’ which disguise broader social issues and hamper governments’ ability to identify needs and formulate appropriate public policy responses; and
• issues pertaining to achieving whole of government outcomes, as well as outcomes across governments.

Federalism

The second Roundtable of the year was held in May at the University of Canberra, and addressed Federalism. The stated objective was to ‘contribute to informed debate about Australia’s federal relations’. The roundtable was held in conjunction with the Institute of Public Administration in Australia (IPAA), and with the support of Minter Ellison Lawyers. The Roundtable was convened by Andrew Podger, of the IPAA, and Michael Keating, and was well attended, with a group of about forty five policy academics and practitioners making up an inner circle, and several more observers constituting an outer circle. The expertise and unique mix of practitioners of public policy which IPAA and ASSA brought to proceedings allowed both organisations the opportunity to pursue a common agenda.

Proceedings dealt with key issues from the current debate in the public arena on Australian federalism:
• the domestic and international forces and trends which are shaping and influencing the Australian federation;
• the Australian federation with regards to, and from the perspective of three key sectors - health and aged care, education, and infrastructure and regulation;
• issues pertaining to accountability and responsibility, as well as to the principle of subsidiarity.

The general discussion in these areas was followed by group discussions focusing on specific aspects, followed by a summation and conclusion to the day’s proceedings. Discussions were highly productive, and will no doubt serve as a platform for the further development of ideas and directions for Australian federation.

Proceedings from these and previous events in the Policy Roundtable Series are available on the Academy’s website at www.assa.edu.au/policy/roundtables.

Urban Water

The next roundtable will be held in November, in association with the Academy’s Annual Symposium, to be held the previous day. The theme of the 2007 Symposium is ‘Power, People, Water: Urban Water Services and Human Behaviour in Australia’, and the roundtable, supported by the National Water Commission, will foster discussion on the policy implications and possibilities related to this theme. This roundtable represents a development in the Policy Roundtable Series, as it will seek to capitalise on ideas discussed within the Symposium by the wider Fellowship. It is hoped that this broader base of prior discussion will assist policy researchers and practitioners to contribute substantially to the formulation of policy proposals which help to secure sustainable urban water systems.

The term of the previous Chair of the Policy and Advocacy Committee, Michael Keating, concluded during 2007, and Glenn Withers now performs that role.

RESEARCH PROGRAM

It has been a productive year for the Academy’s research program. Several research projects are well under way and a number of publications are anticipated from these projects. Research activities are undertaken and managed under the aegis of the Academy’s research committee. These involve major research projects, commissioned research papers, the development and communication of research findings through our workshop program, annual symposia and conferences, academic and Government roundtables, and advice and submissions to Government on issues such as the Research Quality Framework (RQF) in which the Academy has played a very active part.

The leading research project activity on an annually funded basis is the Australian Research Council (ARC) Linkage Learned Academies Special Projects scheme which each year funds one significant research project. The Academy is proud of its publishing record with each of these projects resulting in the publication of a monograph.

ARC Learned Academies Special Projects 2004

In July 2006 Routledge (UK) published the research findings of the Academy ARC funded research project What is to be Done with Management Ethics? The book, Management Ethics: Contemporary Contexts, edited by Stewart Clegg and Carl Rhodes was launched in November 2006 by Justice Michael Kirby FASSA, at a well attended event in the Sydney offices of Hicksons Lawyers. In a characteristically witty and erudite speech, as befits one of Australia’s most prolific book-launchers, Justice Kirby commended the relevance of the book for the contemporary scene, with wry asides about the challenges facing his ‘old colleague in Chambers, Terry Cole’, as he finalises his judgment on the AWB case. In the course of his speech he reflected on his early days in Chambers and how the intimacy and face-to-face relations that prevailed there ensured that members were ethically sound in their dealings. The challenge, he remarked, is how to ensure similar controls operate outside the mantle of professional and small-scale practice. He commended the book as not only of academic interest but also of great practical relevance: few things are more important than an effectively ethical basis for management action, which, all too frequently, proves not to have been the case.

ARC Learned Academies Special Projects 2005

In 2005, the ARC-funded research special project for the Academy reviewed ‘Patterns of population mobility and internal migration in Australia’. A project team led by Peter McDonald (ANU), Graeme Hugo (University of Adelaide) and Martin Bell (School of Geography, Planning and Architecture, University of Queensland), engaged a multi-disciplinary project team nationally and internationally, to provide a definitive analysis of the incidence and patterns of internal migration in Australia at a range of spatial scales.
A book resulting from this project is now expected to be published in 2008 and will be a landmark text: the first comprehensive, policy-relevant, multidisciplinary analysis of Australian mobility for more than a decade.

As reported elsewhere in the Annual Report, last year’s Annual Symposium Australians on the Move, Internal Migration in Australia, which was well attended by many Government policy makers, highlighted research findings from the project.

ARC Learned Academies Special Projects 2006

At the end of 2006 a research proposal entitled ‘New Social Policy Approaches for Sharing Risk’ from Bruce Chapman and Glenn Withers received funding under the Learned Academies Special Projects program.

The purpose of the project is to extend the application of income related loan interventions, as a major form of government initiative, into the social arena and to develop principles and practice for implementation and evaluation.

The project is well advanced, and an important paper on income contingent loans for child care is nearing completion. Significant research progress has been made with respect to the modelling of dynamic simulations of income and their effect on loan repayment calculations and subsidies. A major seminar will be held in August 2008, which will include the participation of a world expert in the area, Professor David Moss, from Harvard University.

ARC Research Project 2007: Creativity and Innovation: Social Science Perspectives and Policy Implications

‘Creativity and Innovation: Social Science Perspectives and Policy Implications’ a research project under the leadership of Janet Chan and Leon Mann, received ARC grant funding for 2007.

A workshop for the project was held in Melbourne in May. Each author presented chapter outlines addressing the background concepts and theories leading to an understanding of creativity/innovation from their disciplinary or inter-disciplinary perspective. Two themes are being addressed: what are the links between creativity and innovation? and, what are the factors that foster creativity and innovation? Authors will address the implications of their analyses for policy, including some policy recommendations.

A second workshop to discuss the chapters was held in Sydney in October and publication is expected in 2008.

‘The Social Sciences and the Making of Postwar Australia’

A research proposal funded by the ARC, ‘The Social Sciences and the Making of Postwar Australia’, involving research collaboration between Victoria University and (Industry Partners) the National Library of Australia and the Academy, is now in its final editing stage.

This project explores the foundational significance of the social sciences in the creation of modern Australia. Using the history of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia as a focus, it is undertaking the first broad historical analysis of the various social scientific fields in Australia since World War II. In doing so it will highlight the previously under-examined but critical influence these fields of knowledge exerted over civil society and public policy.

Commissioned research

A number of peer-reviewed policy papers have been published as part of the Academy’s Occasional Paper Series (Policy Papers). The aim is to present research findings from specialist academics and to stimulate debate on areas of interest to scholars, Government and the broader community. The last in this current series is Population and Australia’s Future Labour Force, prepared by Peter McDonald and Glenn Withers and is currently being peer-reviewed. It is anticipated that the paper will be published by the end of 2007.

Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) and Academy Research Project

The Academy was approached by the Australian Bureau of Statistics in mid-2006, seeking involvement in a collaborative research project, aimed at taking advantage of the rich source material produced from Census 2006. The aim of this collaboration, which is being managed through the Academy’s Research Committee, is for ASSA Fellows or their nominees to undertake to use Census material to write ‘stories’ in essay form, about the current circumstances of people’s lives and significant changes in key areas of contemporary Australian society. Contracts for the project were signed in May 2007.

The first workshop with key authors and representatives from the Australian Bureau of Statistics took place in Melbourne in September 2007. Presentation outlines were made on the areas selected for research and analysis under the following working titles: Housing; Beyond Life Expectancy; The New Social Productivity; Creative Australia; Living Alone; Different Lives; Immigration and Lives of Diversity

A second workshop is scheduled for June 2008 to review completed essays for the project with a view to publication by the end of 2008.

As we head into another year, we would like to thank all members of the Research Committee for their invaluable contributions to the work of the Academy. We look forward to a year of enhanced research program activities in 2008 as the anticipated increase in Government funding for ASSA falls due.

WORKSHOP PROGRAM

The growth in this program over the last several years has continued in 2007, with nine workshops receiving Academy sponsorship, a reflection of the increase in the profile of this program. In particular, the workshops sponsored for 2006-07 reflect the Committee’s emphasis on links between research and policy development and practice, as well as on those both between disciplines and between research, government and bureaucratic institutions.

The Academy’s Executive recently agreed to a proposed increase in the budget available to the Workshop Program Committee, made possible by the increase in funding to the Academy from the Department of Education, Science and Training. The Committee will have close to double the amount of funding to disperse for the financial year 2008-09. This increase will allow the committee to raise the number and quality of proposals funded, allowing in particular, increased participation at workshops. The workshop program has contributed to the profile of the Academy in the field of social sciences research, and the expansion which the increased funding allows will further raise that profile among those engaged in social sciences research in government and other policy circles.

The Committee is in the process of completing the funding round for workshops for the next year and details of workshops to be supported will be available on the Academy’s website, www.assa.edu.au.

Nine workshops have been sponsored by the Academy in the financial year 2007-2008. Five of these have been held:

- ‘Student engagement with post-compulsory education and training: meaning-making in a context of blurred boundaries and shifting policy and work contexts’. Convened by Alison Mackinnon, Terri Seddon, Marie Brennan (all from the University of South Australia) and Lyn Yates (University of Melbourne), Adelaide, 22-23 February 2007.
  The report for this workshop was published in Dialogue, 26, 2/2007.

  This workshop was sponsored by the Academy and funded by the Australian National Commission for UNESCO Grant Scheme. The report for this workshop was published in Dialogue, 26, 2/2007.

- ‘Cosmopolitanism. Its practices and its pasts’. Glenda Sluga and Julia Horne (both from the University of Sydney) and Barbara Caine (Monash University), Sydney, 2-3 August 2007.
  This workshop was supported by funding from the Academies of the Social Sciences and the Humanities, and a report will appear in Dialogue 3/2007.
Workshop Program Academy of the Social Sciences 2007

- ‘Seen and heard: children as active agents in families, policy and research’. Ilan Katz (University of New South Wales), Sydney, September 2007.

The four workshops yet to be held are:
- ‘The future of Australian anti-discrimination law’. Beth Gaze (University of Melbourne) and Margaret Thornton (Australian National University), Melbourne, 15-16 November 2007.
- ‘Combating social exclusion through joined up policy: addressing social inclusion through whole-of-government approaches’. David Cappo (Commissioner for Social Inclusion, SA) and Bettina Cass (University of New South Wales), Adelaide, November 2007.
- ‘Theoretical, empirical and policy inputs to modelling healthy ageing’. Laurie Buys and Karrin Anstey (both from the Australian Association of Gerontology), Canberra, 5-6 December 2007.

As part of the Academy’s sponsorship and funding arrangements, all workshop conveners are required to provide an acquittal of funds received, as well as report on the proceedings and outcomes of the workshops. These reports are printed in Dialogue, and all can be viewed on the Academy’s website.

INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM

The Academy continues to maintain active relationships with sister Academies in China, the Netherlands, the UK, and India. It also has a substantial joint research program with France, generously funded through the French Embassy and financially supported by ASSA. These research programs and exchanges have been significant in assisting scholars to undertake collaborative research in partner countries, to give seminar and conference papers, and in some cases, to harness major grants from other funding bodies.

International activities have been reinforced through ASSA’s membership of the Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils and from the naming of Executive Director, John Beaton, as AASSREC’s Secretary-General.

Australia-China Exchange Program

The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS) and the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia have had an exchange agreement since 1980. The agreement has supported a regular program of visits by Chinese scholars to Australia and Australian scholars to China.

Dr Ingrid Nielsen, Department of Management, Faculty of Business and Economics, Monash University, visited China in December 2006. Dr Nielsen is currently conducting joint research with Associate Professor Wang Dewen from the Institute of Population and Labour Economics at CASS on a project titled: ‘The Effects of English Language Self-Efficacy Among Chinese Market Vendors: Impact on Bargaining with International Customers’.

Dr Li Wen, Senior Research Fellow and Head of the Department of Political Studies, Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, visited Australia from 7-21 October. He was hosted by the Monash Asia Institute, Monash University. His area of research is focused on Australia and East Asian regional cooperation and the building of the East Asian community and during his visit he sought opportunities for future academic cooperation between China and Australia.

Dr Mark King, Centre for Accident Research and Road Safety, School of Psychology and Counselling, Queensland University of Technology, has been nominated for a visit to China in October 2008. The primary purpose of his visit is to establish cooperative research on road safety, focusing on the transfer of road safety knowledge and expertise.

Australia-Netherlands Exchange Program

This year the Academy received a record eight applications for support under the program for 2006-07. Three applicants were granted funding:

Dr Lorraine Elliott, Senior Fellow in International Relations, Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies, Australian National University, whose research will focus on global governance, including global environmental governance, Asia Pacific regionalism and non-traditional security. Her host was Professor Frank Biemann, Institute for Environmental Studies, Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam.

Dr Johannes Pols, Director of the Unit for the History and Philosophy of Science, University of Sydney: ‘Medicine, Medical Education and Public Health in Colonial and Modern Indonesia’; hosted by Peter Boomgaard, KITLV, Leiden; Amsterdam School of Social Science Research.

Dr Bob Pokrant, Associate Professor of Anthropology, Director, South Asia Research Unit, Curtin University, Western Australia: ‘Fisheries Governance in South Asia’; hosted by Dr Maarten Bavinck, Director of the Centre for Maritime Research(MARE), University of Amsterdam.

Two scholars were invited to visit Australia from The Netherlands:

Professor Jacomina Nortier of the Department of Dutch Language and Culture, Utrecht University visited Australia in September-October. Her host was Professor John Hajek, School of Languages and Linguistics, University of Melbourne. Besides giving some guest lectures, Professor Nortier investigated research methods in sociolinguistics, multilingualism, language contact and education in Australia.

Professor Jan de Jonge, Department of Technology Management, Eindhoven University of Technology, will visit Australia in November hosted by Professor Maureen Dollard of the Centre for Applied Psychological Research, School of Psychology, University of South Australia.

Australia-France Social Sciences Collaborative Research Projects (SSP)

In April 2002, ASSA and the French Government (through the French Embassy in Canberra), agreed to form stronger research relationships between scholars in the two countries. An expression of this agreement is to provide a funded program to initiate and/or enhance joint research activity. Special consideration is given to projects of interest to both French and Australian scholars and to those relevant to Pacific island studies where research into Indigenous and non-Indigenous contact is topical and important. The funding supports a range of research activities including visits from cooperating scholars travelling to France, to Australia, or to a research site.

The French Embassy received six applications this year and the following projects were granted funding:

- ‘Development and testing of data collection techniques to investigate unsafe alcohol consumption among young people in France and Australia’;
- ‘Population Ageing and Social policy: Modelling Our Future’;
- ‘Indentured Labourers in the Pacific: race, classification and social outcomes in colonial and post-colonial contexts (Australia, New Caledonia, Fiji)’;
- ‘Comparing the Processing of French and English Prosody’.
An information day was held at the Australian National University (ANU) in August in association with the French Embassy to promote collaborative research programs. Both ASSA and the Academy of Science made presentations; John Robertson provided a briefing on the program and its success. Judy Wajcman, as a grant recipient in 2006, provided a case study on her mobile phone project, which has resulted in further major research funding and the recent publication of a report, The Impact of the Mobile Phone on Work / Life Balance (June 2007).

Australia-India Exchange Program

This is the second year of operation of our exchange program with the Indian Council of Social Science Research (ICSSR). Nominations for support under the program in 2006-07 were:

Professor Lesleyanne Hawthorne, Associate Dean International, Faculty of Medicine, Dentistry and Health Sciences, University of Melbourne, researching global skilled migration, in particular the contribution of foreign medical graduates to global workforce supply (India being the primary source to date), for western immigrant-receiving nations.

Dr Ashok Acharya (pictured), Reader, Department of Political Science, University of Delhi who visited Australia in August-September 2007. Dr Acharya’s area of research interest is Multiculturalism and Social Justice, Cross-Cultural Exploration. While in Australia Dr Acharya was hosted in Canberra by James Jupp FASSA, Director of the Centre for Immigration and Multicultural Studies, ANU; in Sydney by Hon Associate Professor Christine Inglis, Director, Multicultural and Migration Research Centre, University of Sydney; and in Melbourne by Professor Marika Vicziany, Director, National Centre for South Asia Studies, Monash Asia Institute, Monash University. In addition to presenting papers at seminars in Sydney and Melbourne, Dr Acharya had an extensive program of consultations with possible collaborative research partners with a view to developing future research projects.

Australia-British Joint Projects

Fourteen applications were received for the 2006-07 round of the Australia-British joint research program, funded as a three-way partnership between ASSA, the Australian Academy of the Humanities and the British Academy. The following Australian applicants and their British partners were supported:

- ‘Whose Urban Renaissance? An international comparison of policy drivers and responses to urban regeneration strategies’: Dr Kate Shaw, Faculty of Architecture, Building and Planning, University of Melbourne.
- ‘Child Care, Welfare Reform and Women’s Labour Force Participation: a scoping exercise for a comparative research project’: Associate Professor Deborah Brennan, Government and International Relations, University of Sydney.

UNESCO Social Sciences Network

ASSA is a member of the UNESCO Social Science Network. In March 2007 Margot Prior FASSA, Network Chair for the Social Sciences, issued a communiqué to network members outlining progress in activities since the meeting in 2006 and in June Network members met in Sydney to attend the annual meeting of the National Commission for UNESCO. Margot briefed the network on her recent visit to the Bangkok Office and the preparations by Australia for the meeting in Paris of the UNESCO general conference in October.

The Academy assisted in obtaining grant funding from UNESCO for the workshop ‘Migration Challenges in the Asia-Pacific Region in the 21st Century’ which was hosted by Amarjit Kaur FASSA, at the University of New England in November 2006.

As we move into another year of international program activities, it is anticipated that an increase in Academy funding will enable the Committee to develop new initiatives in the international arena.

THE FELLOWSHIP
FELLOWS OF THE ACADEMY

The Constitution of the Academy states that ‘persons who are deemed to have achieved distinction in one or more branches of the social sciences may be elected as Fellows of the Academy if (i) they are nominated by one Fellow and seconded by one other Fellow; (ii) they are recommended by the Membership Committee after investigation of their eligibility; and (iii) they receive the support of either fifty percent of the total membership or seventy-five percent of those Fellows voting at a postal ballot’.

Twenty-four new Fellows were elected in 2007.

They are:

Professor Kay Anderson, Professor of Cultural Research, Centre for Cultural Research, University of Western Sydney;

Professor Vicki Anderson, Professor and Director of Psychology, Royal Children’s Hospital, Parkville, Vic;

Professor Neil Brewer, School of Psychology, Faculty of Social Sciences, Flinders University;

Professor Barbara Caine, Head, School of Historical Studies, Monash University;

Professor Peter Cane, Director, John Fleming Centre for Advancement of Legal Research, ANU College of Law, Australian National University;

Professor Mark Dadds, NHMRC Senior Research Fellow, School of Psychology, Faculty of Science, University of New South Wales;

Professor Kathleen Daly, School of Criminology and Criminal Justice, Griffith University;

Professor David de Vaus, Dean, Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, La Trobe University;

Professor Peter Drahos, Professor in Law and Director, Centre for the Governance of Knowledge and Development, Regulatory Institutions Network, ANU College of Asia and the Pacific, Australian National University;

Professor Robyn Eckersley, Department of Political Science, Criminology and Sociology, Faculty of Arts, University of Melbourne;

Professor Heather Goodall, Professor of History, Faculty of Humanities and Social Science, University of Technology Sydney;

Professor Anna Haebich, Director, Centre for Public Culture and Ideas, Griffith University;

Professor Ian Hickie, Professor of Psychiatry, Executive Director, Brain and Mind Research Institute, the University of Sydney;
Professor Robert Hill, Professor of Economics, Australian School of Business, University of New South Wales;
Professor Robert Kohn, UNSW Scientia Professor, School of Economics, Australian School of Business, University of New South Wales;
Professor Peter Lovibond, Professor and Head, School of Psychology, University of New South Wales;
Professor Jason Mattingley, Queensland Brain Institute, the University of Queensland;
Professor Gordon Parker, Executive Director, Black Dog Institute and Scientia Professor, School of Psychiatry, University of New South Wales;
Professor Kathryn Robinson, Department of Anthropology, Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies, Australian National University;
Dr Tim Rowse, Senior Fellow and Head, History Program, Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University;
Professor Jane Stapleton, John Fleming Centre for Advancement of Legal Research, ANU College of Law, Australian National University;
Professor Bob Stimson, Professor of Geographical Sciences and Planning and Director, Centre for Research in Sustainable Urban and Regional Futures, the University of Queensland;
Associate Professor Shurlee Swain, Honours and Postgraduate Co-ordinator, School of Arts and Sciences, Australian Catholic University; and Professor Jane Watson, Professor of Mathematics Education, Faculty of Education, University of Tasmania.

At November 2007 there were 471 Fellows of the Academy including newly elected, Honorary and overseas Fellows.

OBITUARIES

Jerzy (George) Smolicz AM, 1935-2006

George Smolicz, who died in Adelaide on 3 November 2006, was one of a vanishing group of academics who, by combining groundbreaking research on multiculturalism with the advocacy of pluralist policies, were able to make substantial contributions to policy in Australia.

Born in Poland in February 1935, he accompanied his parents into exile, first in Lebanon and then in Scotland, where he attended school. At the University of Edinburgh his first degree was in chemistry and his PhD in sociology of science. Following a research fellowship at Lincoln College, Oxford, he took up a Lectureship in Education at the University of Adelaide, with sociology of education as his specialisation. He was moved by his personal experience and what he perceived as the exigencies of Australian society to change his main interest to sociology of cultural minorities and eventually sociology of language. The seminal role he played in transforming Australian thinking on the education of ‘migrant children’ in the 1970s began with his innovative book Culture and Education in a Plural Society (1969) and the powerful article ‘Is the Australian school an assimilation agency?’ (1971).

Insights and commitment fed into policy recommendations on committees and in reports. This included the Committee on the Teaching of Migrant Languages in Schools (1976), whose findings were repeated in many subsequent reports and policies, and the South Australian report, Education for a Cultural Democracy (1984), which was the result of a task force chaired by George. The fact that South Australia had become one of the leaders in multicultural education was due in no small way to George’s persistence, charm, mediating diplomacy, and commitment to links between research and action. He was superb at networking and lobbying for the causes he espoused. Of the committees he chaired, the Multicultural Education Consultative Committee was the most important, and it is the only surviving one of its kind in Australia.

George was promoted several times at the University of Adelaide and held a Professorship in Education from 1987 to 2005. He was for a time a member of the University Council. In 1989 he established and continued to direct the Centre for Intercultural Studies and Multicultural Education, which gathered colleagues from universities and beyond, working in similar areas. Through his lively teaching skills and infectious personality, George inspired generations of students who were to hold important positions in Education and other spheres of public life. Among politicians to be influenced by him was former South Australian premier, Lynn Arnold, who subsequently wrote a PhD thesis under George’s supervision on Asturian, a regional minority language in Spain.

The contribution to the sociology of language for which George will be best remembered is the theory of core values. In an article in 1981 which has been translated into five languages, he argued that different cultures have different values that are fundamental to their existence as a group and the rejection of which can lead to exclusion from the group. Language is such a value to some cultures and not to others. This theory has become crucial to research on the maintenance of minority languages all over the world and was refined in collaboration with Dr Margaret Secombe and through empirical studies conducted by his graduate students. Languages studied in the Australian context under his supervision included Amharic, Chinese, Filipino, Greek, Italian, Khmer, Latvian, Persian, Polish, Serbo-Croatian, Tamil, Ukrainian, Vietnamese, and Welsh. The theory was also facilitated by studies of diaries of school experiences commissioned from people of different ethnic backgrounds which led to Smolicz and Secombe’s book The Australian School through Children’s Eyes (1981). George’s commitment to multiculturalism and multilingualism was demonstrated in the priority he gave them in raising his children, Camilla and Christopher, bilingually in Polish and English.

George was elected to the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia in 1976. He served on the Executive and on numerous committees, notably the International Committee, and for many years coordinated the Academy’s local activities in South Australia. George was a committed member of AASSREC (the Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils) and attended its meetings for about 20 years. Former ASSA president Fay Gale remembers him as ‘an important contributor with his broad knowledge and his understanding of the diversity of the cultures and languages in the Association. George was able to negotiate disagreements and misunderstandings to ensure successful outcomes’. George was in great demand as a visiting professor, especially in Asia and Poland. In 2002 he was awarded the UNESCO Linguapax Prize for Language Policy Research.

He became a Member of the Order of Australia in 1988. He was also a Commander of the Cross of the Polish Order of Merit, a knight of the Order of Malta, a foreign member of the Polish Academy of Sciences, a fellow of the Australian College of Education, the Royal Institute of Chemistry, and the Royal Society of the Arts, and honorary professor at the Santo Tomas University in Manila.

George is survived by his adult children, Camilla and Christopher.

FINANCIAL STATEMENTS
The accompanying financial statements of The Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated are drawn up so as to give the results of the Academy for the year ended 30 June 2007.
To the best of our knowledge these statements give a true and fair view of the operation of the Academy.

AUDITOR’S STATEMENT
To the Members of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated.
Scope
I have audited the financial report of Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated as set out in the Income and Expenditure Statements attached. The Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated committee is responsible for the financial report. I have conducted an independent audit of the financial report in order to express an opinion on it to the members.
The audit has been conducted in accordance with Australian Audit Standards to provide reasonable assurance whether the financial report is free of material misstatement. Our procedures included examination of evidence supporting the amounts and other disclosures in the financial reports and the evaluation of accounting policies and significant accounting estimates. These procedures have been undertaken to form an opinion as to whether, in all material respects, the financial report is presented fairly in accordance with Accounting Standards, other mandatory professional reporting requirements and the requirements of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated so as to present a view which is consistent with the my understanding of the Association’s financial position and the results of its operations.
The audit opinion expressed in this report has been formed on the above basis.
Audit Opinion

In my opinion the financial report presents fairly in accordance with applicable Accounting Standards, other mandatory professional reporting requirements and the requirements of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia Incorporated the financial position of the Academy as at 30 June 2007 and the results of its operations for the year ended.
